"I can only say that the decision could be made after the elections in 2014, but not before that," Dan Ban, the head of the country's oil shale industry office told Reuters on Monday. "Our statistics, though, show that Romania is a different country from a political standpoint, so after the elections it will be possible to make a final decision on oil shale," he said. In the last elections, Romania put forward Geani Lucinschi, a businessman with close links to former President Ion Iliescu, to succeed current Prime Minister Emil Boc as leader of a right-wing nationalist government. Ban said he was satisfied with the government's current position on the issue. The government signed a contract in May to develop and test oil shale in three potential sites in the country's west, northwest and northeast. The area is expected to produce up to 100,000 barrels of oil from shale. Ban, who has also been speaking to Hungarian Prime Minister Victor Orban about oil shale, said Romania had identified Hungary, Italy and Ukraine as potential markets for shale. "I am working on it very hard, and we are trying to reach a conclusion together with Hungarians," he said. The government is expecting a market ready to take the oil by 2018-2019. "We are waiting for the minister to make the final decision, but so far there is no official figure saying that it can happen by 2018-2019," d0c515b9f4
